KEY FINDINGS FROM THE FRENCH PANEL

RESULTS FROM THE FRENCH PANEL INDICATE A RELATIVELY HIGH LEVEL OF MATURITY WHEN IT COMES TO WATER RISKS, WHILE UNDERLINING A STRONGER PROPENSITY TOWARDS RISK REPORTING NORMS AND REGULATIONS

REGULATORS are considered to have the most effective role when it comes to pushing better water management.

More than 3/4 consider water risk & impact reporting as a required or mandatory element of corporate reporting & communication.

TOP DRIVER
Introducing a water risk reporting standard.

Nearly 80% think that water risks will impact global business within the next 10 years.

70% of the panel discuss water risks with their stakeholders such as investors, regulators, suppliers or customers.

In this edition, we are highlighting some of the key messages from our French panel, which is composed of 100 C-level executives across all sectors and company sizes. While the French panel shows a high similarity to the global panel in most responses, it does exhibit some key variances compared to the overall global panel: the results indicate a higher level of maturity in terms of water risk evaluation, mitigation as well as key stakeholder involvement. If the overall global panel indicates a clear call for tools and performance indicators, the French panel underlines a stronger propensity towards risk reporting norms and regulations.
